MY RESPONSE, 7 YEARS LATER

7 years ago, I was in a relationship with someone who lied compulsively, cheated on me, deceived me, and has been trying to ruin my life to this day, even though I have always remained silent.

This week, she accused me of sexual assault.
It is completely untrue.

It is time to finally tell everything that I have experienced.

Original / Translation

This relationship began in 2015. I had just turned 18 and she was 20. Nine years ago. I broke up with her in 2017, two years later.

After I broke up with her, I never responded to any of the many allegations she made publicly about me. I didn't want my followers to go on a witch hunt, and I certainly didn't want to expose a personal relationship that would only bring more pain.

The only statement I made was mentioning that I went to therapy, I never mentioned her name and never spoke of anything she did to me. I NEVER attacked her, or encouraged any kind of attack or hatred towards her, in all these years.

And, despite her always claiming that she "doesn't want to relive this matter," she is literally the only one who keeps talking, making up, and distorting more and more things, even 7 years later. And I have always remained silent, always endured in silence. But this week, she made the worst accusation of all, and there's no more enduring it.

This is a document stating all the facts that I have lived through, with the evidence I have at my disposal to confirm them. This is not an apology. I'm not here to try to convince anyone who doesn't like me to change their mind.

I have learned after all these years that in this situation, I will always be seen as guilty.No matter what I say, any kind of defense or argument will always be accused of "silencing" her.

And if I stay quiet, which is what I did for all these years, it is interpreted as "stayed quiet because it confirms it's true." And she continued to accuse me of increasingly absurd things.

So, as I said, this is not an apology, it's a clarification. A detailed report of everything that happened, point by point of all the events that were "exposed" by my ex-girlfriend. And from here, you can draw your own conclusions.

I know that even after everything that's written here, many people will still refuse to consider the other side. There's a constructed image that I'm a psychopathic monster, and it's hard to erase. But this document is not for the people who believe that; this clarification is for those who have always been willing to understand.

I just want people to finally listen to my story and come to their own conclusions. I will not let this continue to destroy the lives of the people I love in the same way it destroys mine.

ASEXUALITY AND ACCUSATIONS OF SEXUAL ASSAULT

I will start directly by responding to the accusation that has led me to publish this response after all these years of silence. I have never been accused of something so absurd, and I am completely confident that I can PROVE it is IMPOSSIBLE for this accusation to be real.

After years of accusing me of countless things, for the first time, my ex-girlfriend decided to accuse me of an unforgivable crime. She published a tweet containing my name, implying that I sexually assaulted her.

Without any proof, after years of making one exposure after another trying to destroy my image and my life, she finally decided to resort to the worst thing she could:

I am asexual.

All my close friends have known for many years that I am asexual, and I have even mentioned it in some places publicly. My sexuality has never been a topic I talked much about, but I also never made an effort to hide it.

In short, this doesn't mean that I can't have sex, but I simply have no interest or desire.

I have always been this way, since childhood, and although I am interested in romance and fall in love normally with people, I do not feel the desire to have sexual relations of any kind.

I always grew up feeling that there was something different about me in comparison to other people. I questioned my sexuality a lot, didn't understand if I was gay, or if there was something physically wrong with me, and believed that maybe I would understand everything when I lost my virginity. This happened with this ex-girlfriend, and from the first time I had sexual intercourse, I realized that this was indeed the way I was. I began to research, read about asexuality on the internet, and talked to a psychologist about it.

Despite this, I can have and have had sexual relations in my life. Even though I feel no desire or physiological need to have sex.

In fact, I currently have a healthy sex life with my current girlfriend.

With my ex-girlfriend who accused me of sexual assault, we had sex regularly and always when she wanted to; it was always she who initiated, and she always questioned me about what was wrong with me. It was a topic that she always brought up at the time to humiliate me among friends, too. Sometimes with jokes, but other times much more openly. On one occasion, for example, we went out with some people and she asked one of them to give me a "sex education" so I would "do things with more enthusiasm."

She also constantly asked me to undergo medical examinations and treatments to try and "fix" me. All the sexual relations I had with her went on until she felt satisfied, and then she asked me to finish by myself.

I talked to her numerous times about being asexual while we were together, mentioned that I had talked about it in therapy, and that I was reading more about it in online communities. She didn't believe that was possible and insisted something was wrong with me.

Original / Translation
Even after we ended our relationship, when we talked again in 2018, she still invalidated my sexuality.

I lost count of how many times she made me feel obliged to have sex with her, even when I clearly didn't want to, just so that she would feel satisfied, for fear that if I didn't, she would cheat on me.

Even though she knew that this was a subject I didn't like to talk about, she still spoke publicly about our sex life just so that I would feel more pressured to "go and see what's wrong".

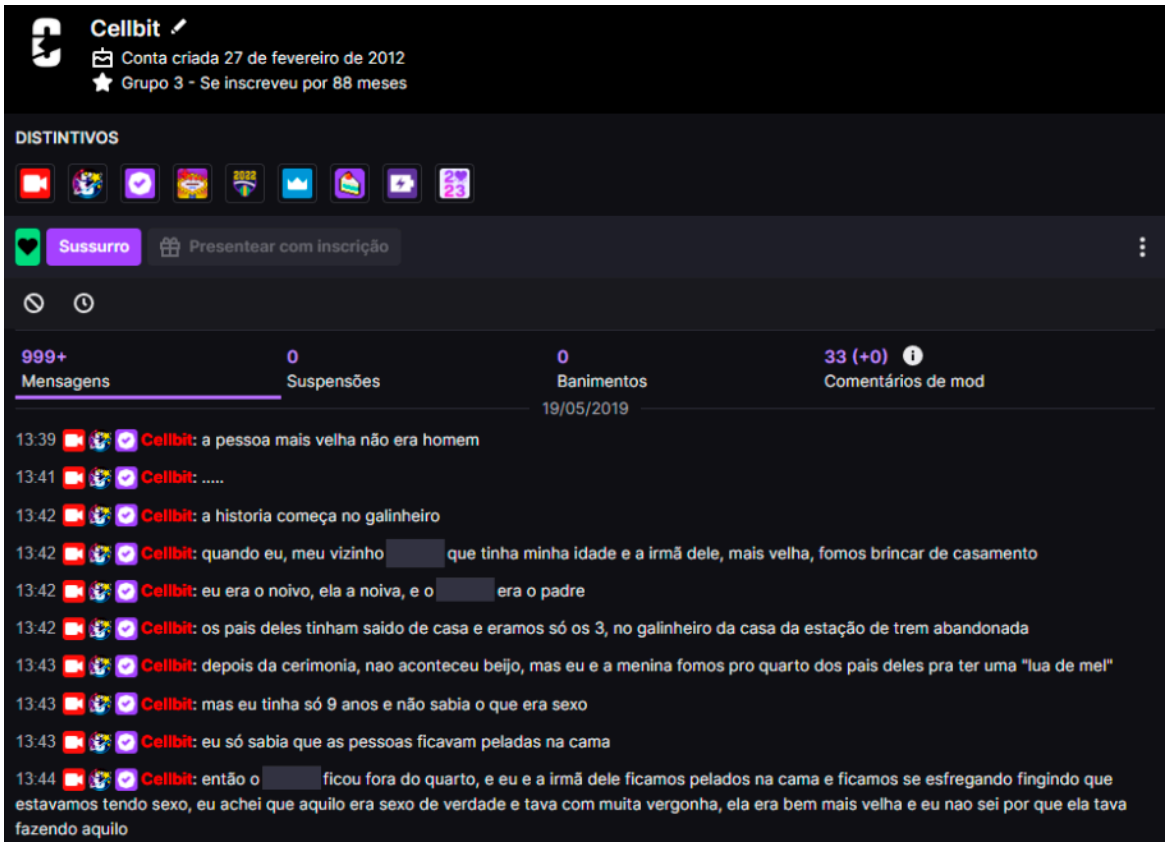
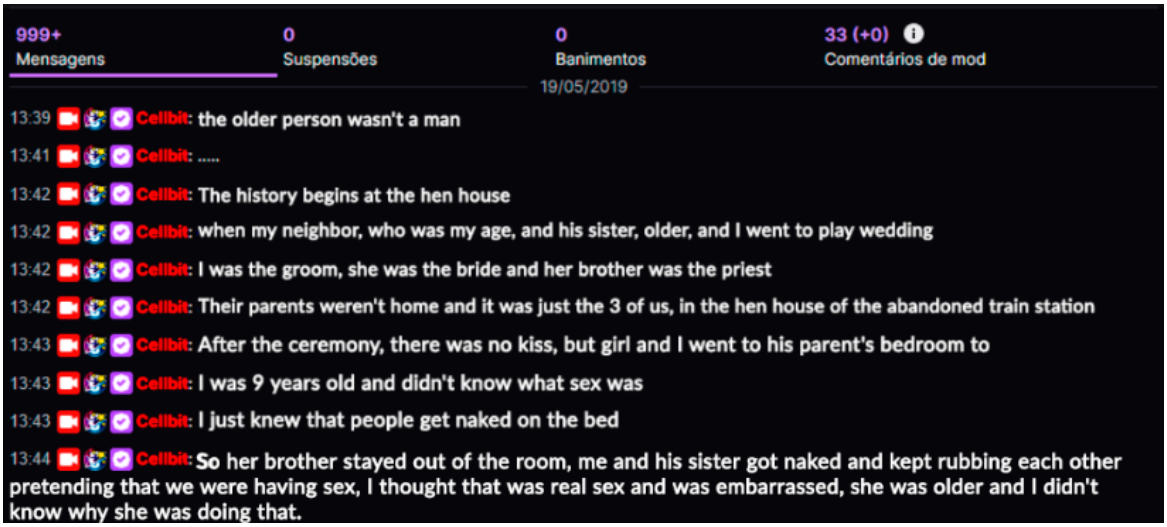
I can't understand why she decided to lie about something she knows I would never be able to do.

THE ABUSE I'VE SUFFERED

On top of all this, I was sexually abused when I was 9 by my neighbor when I lived in the countryside, and she knows it. This is a story that I avoided exposing as much as possible, I never had the courage to even tell my mother about it, and she KNOWS that I NEVER wanted to expose it to the entire internet no matter what, it was something that left me with gigantic traumas and that is still very difficult to talk about.

Very few people in my social circle know about it, because it's something that hurts me so much to remember. In 2019, I also told part of this story to some mods and people in my offstream chat community that I trusted.





Original and Translated Screenshot of Twitch log on 19/05/2019.

And now, YEARS AFTER I have lived through this hell, being humiliated several times by her, questioning my own sexuality, feeling used, she makes a post implying that I did the lowest, most disgusting crime there is. A crime that I suffered.

A person she KNOWS would never be capable of committing it, but she feels free to accuse me because until now I have always remained silent.

Accusing me of something that has literally never been mentioned by her before, suddenly, in the week that I'm going to attend an international award ceremony, it's something that comes up as a new report that she deletes right after giving people time to take a screenshot, as she always does.

She's always claimed that we had a toxic relationship, but now, in 2024, she's accusing me of sexual assault, without any kind of proof, and having never spoken about it before in all these years.

Even after 7 years, she continues to control my life, forcing me to publicly humiliate myself and talk about the most intimate side of my life, making me expose my sexuality and the fact that I was abused as a child just so she could prove that I would never do something terrible like that.

For me, that's the limit.
I've always had empathy and concern for her, and she never stopped. I just want to be able to live my life in peace.

THE BEGINNING OF THE RELATIONSHIP AND THE OTHER ACCUSATIONS

I met my ex-girlfriend in 2015, at an event called XMA 2015. I had a panel to talk to some followers and take some photos afterwards. At these events, all the guests are separated into separate rooms where they can chat. There, I met her for the first time and right away we started flirting with each other.

We talked for about 30 minutes, I had just turned 18 and had never dated. She was older, 20, and had had several boyfriends. We exchanged WhatsApp numbers and I left to do my panel. At the end of the event, we met again and continued talking for a bit more.

During the night, I went to send her a message and noticed that her WhatsApp photo was a selfie of a man, not her. I thought she had given me the wrong number, but I sent a message and in a few seconds saw her changing the avatar to a photo of herself and replying to me.

I asked who was in the photo, and she told me it was a meme she was doing pretending to be a friend. We continued flirting and exchanging messages for a while, until someone warned me that she apparently had a boyfriend.

She was dating a professional League of Legends player, and had gone to the XMA event as his companion, since his team was participating in a championship at that event.

When I asked about it, she told me he was just a fling (he wasn't, they were dating), but that she was going to break up with him soon because she claimed he "was mean to her." She said she was just waiting for the right moment to break up with him because he "was in a championship and it would affect his career."

Meanwhile, she asked me to travel to her city so we could meet. It was then, a few days later, that we met in Monte Alto, a small town where she lived, and stayed together in an inn.

And it was in this inn that she cheated on her boyfriend with me, while I lost my virginity believing she no longer spoke to him. Since it was my first time, she constantly complained and made jokes about my inexperience.

It was on that day that I began to understand that I am asexual, something that would become important later in our relationship.

We continued to see each other for a few more weeks while she always made excuses for why she hadn't ended the relationship yet, saying she was almost done, it was just one more game, just one more weekend.

Eventually, she asked me to help her write a breakup message to her boyfriend on a Skype call, and finally, we could have a "real relationship". But the damage had already been done, and I just hadn't realized it yet. I hadn't realized what I was getting into, and it was my first girlfriend. I was in love with someone who was manipulating and lying to her previous boyfriend while doing the same to me.

Some people from the League of Legends scene who knew her warned me that she used to "change boyfriends quite frequently" and that they had heard stories of cheating before.

This whole situation left me extremely traumatized and paranoid, but this was just the beginning.

A few months passed, we dated long distance for a while, and then we both moved to São Paulo into different apartments. She went to live with her sister and study at college, and I moved in with some friends to an apartment.

This initial context is important for what comes next.

HER ACCUSATIONS

In the accusations she made after our breakup, the accounts were always distorted and described ambiguously, using words like "abuser" and "aggressor" to imply that some form of assault might have happened or not.

Among other things, she said that: "I kicked her out of the house," that she "was locked in a bathroom," that I insulted her, and that I "threw her things away."

All these stories are distortions of a single event.

Contrary to what she claims when she says that "I kicked her out of the house," we never lived together; she lived 20 minutes away from me, although she sometimes slept at my house because we were dating.

During our relationship, she constantly told stories about another specific ex-boyfriend, an abuser, who used cocaine, who sexually harassed her, who broke into her house, who threatened to kill himself to be with her, and whom she had even called the police on.
She talked about how she had blocked him from everything, but he still tried to talk to her after years, and even followed her home once.

And finally, at a moment when we were together, she was using her phone next to me, and a Facebook Messenger notification popped up. It was a message sent by this ex, whom I had heard countless stories about being a psychopath abuser, apparently replying to a message from her. I have never seen anyone swipe away a notification so quickly in my life as she did at that moment.

And it was on that day that I discovered that not only was he not blocked by her, but they were talking about possibly getting back together. All these messages were from that same week, while she was dating me.

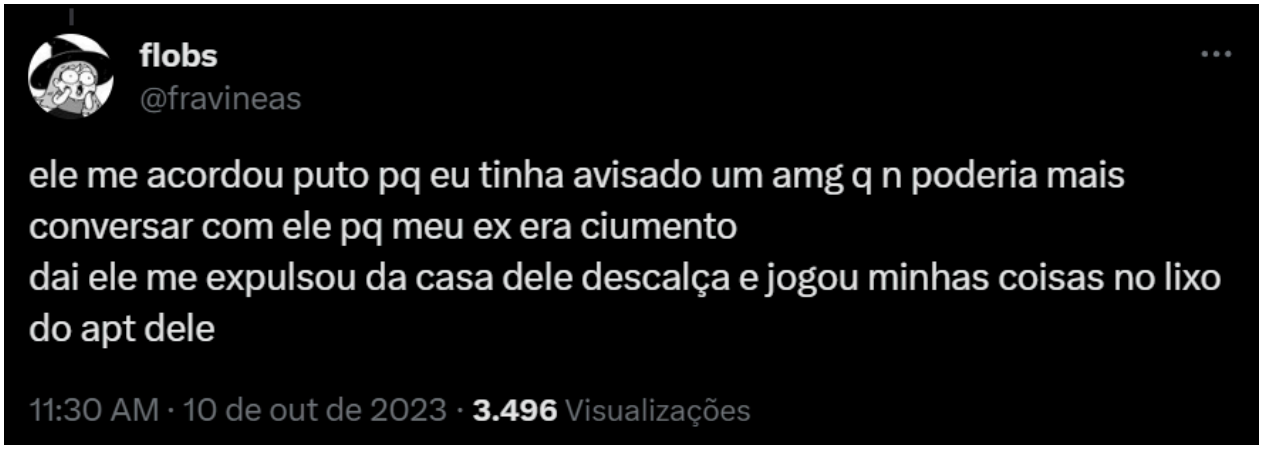
I then confronted her for cheating on me, and told her to leave my apartment and go to her house. She started screaming, crying, she pushed me, slapped me in the face, and locked herself in the bathroom, saying she wouldn't leave.

She would constantly hit me, which at the time I thought was "normal" for being in my first relationship, thinking that all girlfriends must hit their boyfriends, especially since she was a woman and smaller than me, I didn't consider it a "real assault" even though it hurt me.

Even though she hit me with slaps and shoves more than once, I never retaliated nor laid a finger on her.

I knocked on the bathroom door telling her to grab her things and leave my house, and she refused. This is the account she transformed into "I was locked in the bathroom" - because, after all, the bathroom key is on the inside, it would be impossible and illogical for me to lock someone outside the bathroom while I was trying to break up with that person for having cheated on me.

Since she refused to leave, I said I would leave all her things outside the apartment and when she decided to leave, she could go fetch them. I placed her backpack in the building's garage. This is the account she transformed into "I threw her things away."



Original / Translation

And yes, I insulted her when I discovered I was cheated on. And she insulted me as much as I insulted her, if not more. Any situation that happened, she made me feel like a monster, literally inventing phrases I never said and making me believe I had said things I didn't remember.

After that, we were separated for a few months, but still kept in touch and saw each other a few times. She invented dozens of different excuses, ranging from "it wasn't exactly that and I misunderstood" to "she was only saying that to her ex because she was afraid he would do something to me."

She always knew exactly how to speak and manipulate things convincingly. Eventually, we got back together, but obviously, my psyche was already completely destroyed.

Over time, the relationship got worse and worse. She constantly caught herself in small lies she compulsively made. I noticed she always changed some things in the stories she told, constantly spoke ill of all her friends and especially her best friend at the time, or even specific nonsensical things like saying she never felt attraction to any man other than me.

She said other streamers hit on her at events to see my reaction, and in one specific situation, she flirted so much with another influencer that he tried to kiss her in front of me, and when I confronted him, he justified it by saying she had implied to him that we had an open relationship.

Furthermore, she continued to have increasingly violent outbursts, often in public over minor things, such as screaming at me in the middle of a restaurant with my friends because I put ketchup on the edge of a plate of fries without asking for her permission, then taking an Uber and leaving.

Or even creating situations to blackmail me, like hiding my notebook that I used for work and refusing to return it until I did what she wanted.

Another account from her includes a party where I "abandoned her and left" - at this party, we argued after I saw her giving her phone number to a guy she had just met at the party when I returned from the bathroom. She justified it by saying "he seemed sad and I went to talk to him, and I told him if he needed anything to just send me a message." After that, I went to another part of the party, and when I returned, I couldn't find her anywhere. I walked around looking for her and nobody had seen her or knew where she was. I had her phone with me, and I searched the party for nearly an hour without finding her. I thought maybe she had taken a taxi or gotten a ride with someone, and I went back home to see if I could find her there. An hour later, one of her friends dropped her off at my apartment, and she said she had been on the second floor of the party (which was a closed area, there was no party there, I would never have thought to go up to the second floor looking for her) venting and talking with a friend.

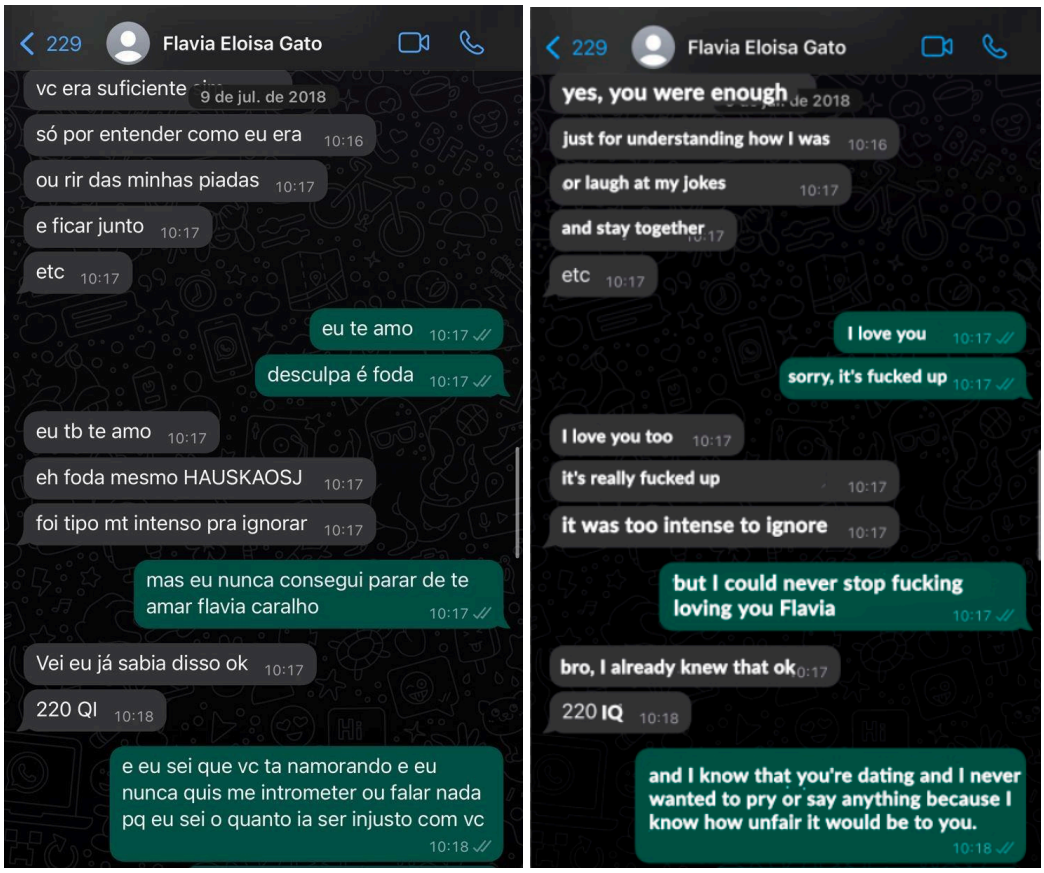
She also claimed that I wasn't supportive, and that I was trying to stop her from creating content for the internet, while all the first edited vlogs on her channel were recorded with my camera and I taught her how to edit videos for her channel myself.

She made me believe that I was dependent on her, that I would never find someone who truly loved me, that everyone else would only be with me out of interest, for the followers. And I believed it.

Eventually, after two years of an extremely toxic relationship, I finally decided to break up with her in 2017.

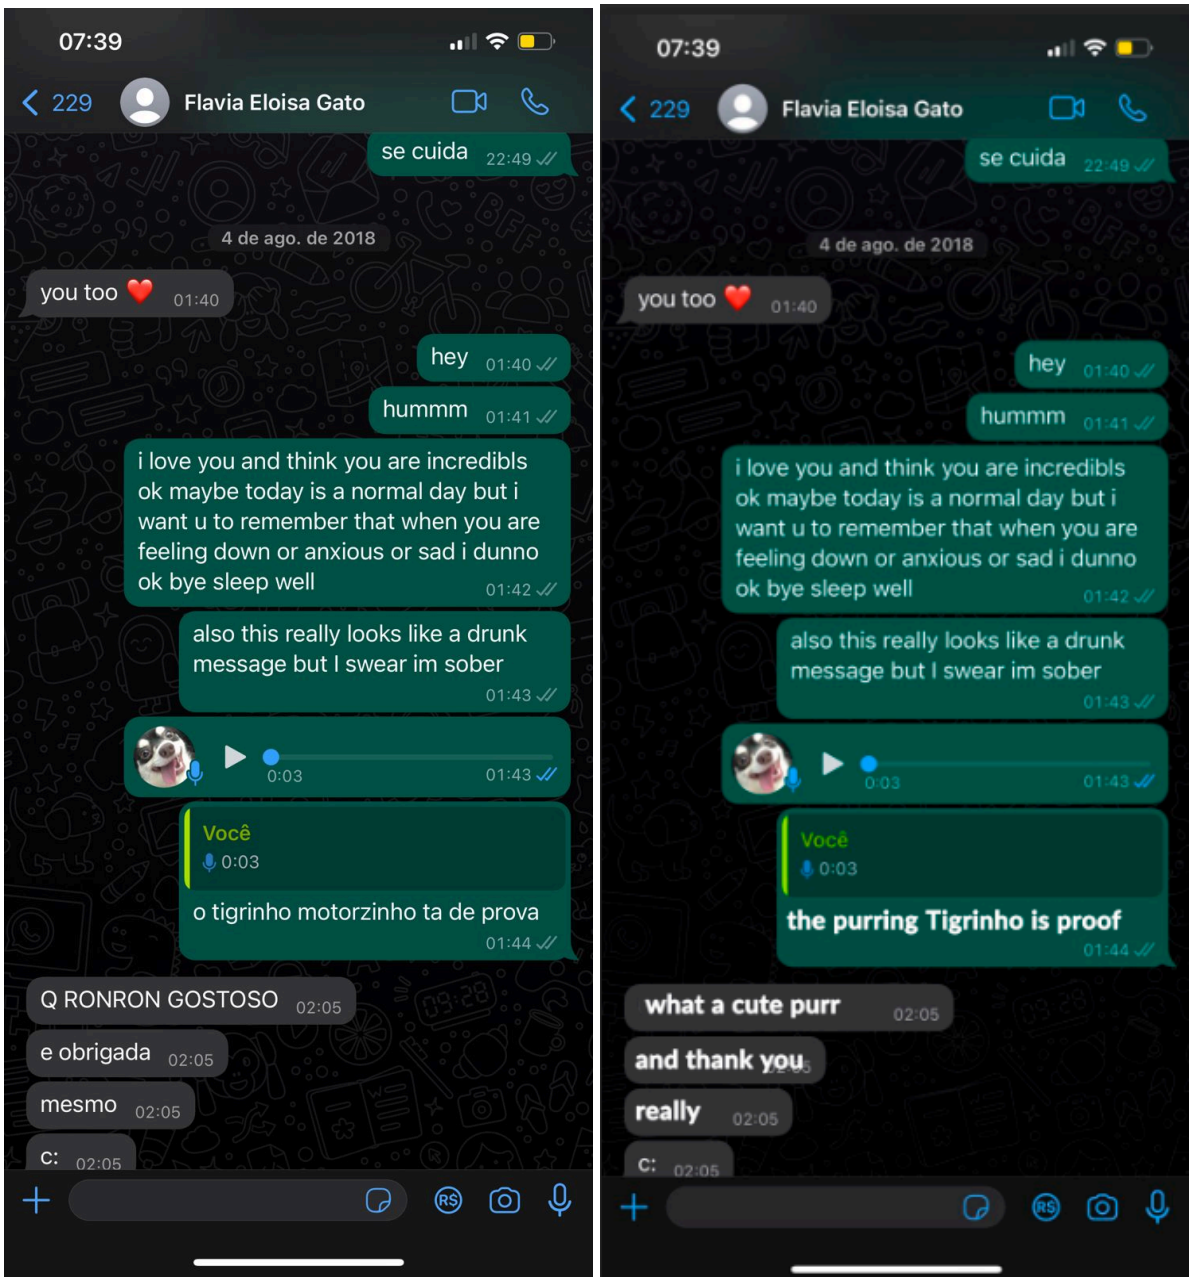
Even after we ended the relationship, she continued her mythomanic and manipulative behavior; as soon as we broke up, she started dating another influencer with whom she had been talking for a while. In 2018, while she was still dating him, she secretly talked to me and said she still loved me.



Original / Translation

We had NUMEROUS conversations about our relationship, where we apologized to each other. Even though she publicly said "we never resolved anything" in her livestreams, we talked normally as if everything was fine.

This is literally the last interaction we had before she made livestreams claiming I was a psychopath who destroyed her life:



Original / Translation
(We sometimes spoke in English because she is English. "Tigrinho" was my cat's name; the audio was the cat purring.)

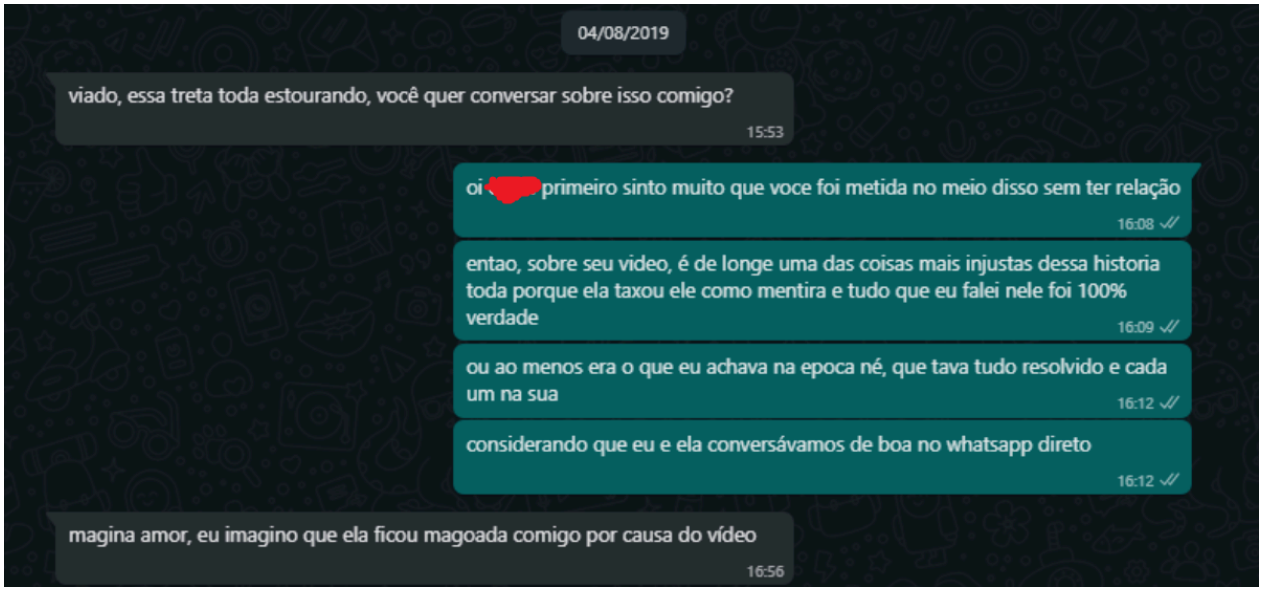
Moreover, she even had the capacity to use my period of depression and exposing my suicide attempt as a way to VILIFY me, when I was going through the worst time of my life, couldn't work, started using drugs for a few months, and could only think about suicide every day. I only stayed alive because my BEST FRIEND rushed to my house to save my life.

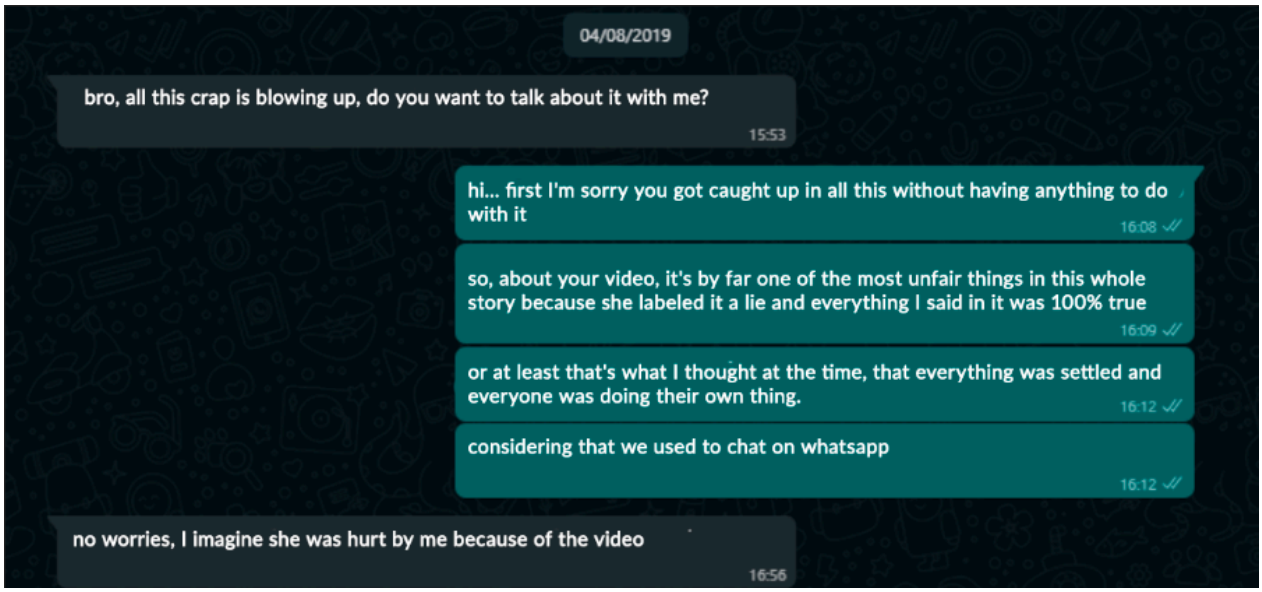
Something I will always be eternally grateful for and will never forget, something he also never commented on because he knew it was something I try to forget, an extremely traumatic time that I promised I would never live through again.

Yet another story I NEVER wanted to tell, and she EXPOSED in her livestream as if somehow my attempt to kill myself was proof that I am a monster.

And even after all this, I remained silent, watching her distort everything we lived through and turn me into a monster for the whole internet, afraid that if I responded everything would become 10 times bigger and worse, and the internet would turn not only my life but also her life into a nightmare.

When I was interviewed on a show with another influencer and asked about the reason for the breakup, I tried not to start a war or gossip by giving a generic response saying that we went our separate ways and everything was fine because we were really talking normally. And my ex used that to vilify me, saying that I was trying to lie about the relationship in the interview to "erase my mistakes."





Explaining to the interviewer that what I'd said was true and that we were talking normally, as the other screenshot above proves, even though she didn't believe me.
Original / Translation

I always feared that everything would turn into a circus for everyone to watch as both lives fell apart when I just wanted her to be well and leave me in peace.

After the breakup, I spent years unable to seriously relate to anyone, harboring numerous traumas, believing I could never trust other people again, and never would find someone who accepted my asexuality.

It took me more than 3 years to finally trust someone again, and today I am in a new relationship of almost 4 years, an extremely healthy relationship that has shown me what it really means to trust someone and has been making me a better person every day.

But, once again, as happens several times a year, my ex-girlfriend continues to revive and create new stories, every time something relevant happens, whether I get canceled for being a jerk and banning a guy playing Tetris, or if another influencer is canceled for an abusive relationship, or if I am nominated for an important international award, she shows up once again posting something about the subject only to delete the tweets shortly after and position herself as someone who is being attacked and "not left in peace." Just as she will probably do now, again.

Over time, she went from distorting events to inventing completely new things since even the audience was starting to question why she kept bringing up the same subject over and over again, like claiming that I "controlled what she ate," or that I "tracked her location by GPS," which is completely false.

She also takes the opportunity to blame me for things I have no connection to, like saying that my fans and I made her lose her Instagram and "lose job opportunities," when the truth is that her Instagram was reported when she was canceled for a post complaining about an event, and several influencers and websites mocked that.

Her post that resulted in the mass report that deleted her instagram.

Another thing that continues to be said incessantly on the internet is that I "never suffered any consequences even after she exposed all this" - I lost dozens of contracts from all the advertising agencies and production companies that closed their doors and never invited me to events or advertisements again. But I never went public to complain or expose this, because once again, this would result in a war involving the public.

All I could do was continue working and continue believing that at some point all this would end. But all that happened was that it caused a wave of hate against me, which led to accusations of various very serious and unacceptable crimes from random people on the internet who believed all the stories they saw about me, even though there was never any proof.

And I can't take it anymore, I can't stand knowing that my mother receives threats and terrible texts in her DMs, seeing people telling my girlfriend to kill herself or hoping she gets abused just to confirm the theories and accusations of my ex-girlfriend to see "another Cellbit expose."

And I will continue to sue everyone who continues to make up lies about me on the internet, no matter the engagement. If you have something to say, you better have evidence to take to court. I took too long to realize that I didn't need to stay silent in the face of the atrocities spoken about me, and I'm not stopping now.

They have already destroyed my image and my life on the internet, but I will not let this continue with the people close to me. I want to be happy with the people I love, and I will no longer accept being treated like a criminal.

She accused me of sexual assault, something that could end my life, publicly, believing that I probably would not respond, because I never responded before. She was not accusing me of being a bad, jealous, or possessive boyfriend as she always did. She lied by accusing me of a very serious crime.

And now, she's going to position herself in a way where this document is an attack on her, when all I'm doing is defending myself from the biggest false accusation ever made against me, of a crime. I want to make it CLEAR: this document is NOT an attack or an attempt to bring hate to anyone, I am simply defending myself by giving my account of the events that happened. I DID NOT WANT TO BE DOING THIS, but it was the only way to be honest and faithful to everyone who supported me in my projects and my community.

And I know that those who already don't like me, for whatever reason, will still not believe me. And as I said, I'm not here to try to change anyone's opinion.

In the end, here in this document are the proofs of a pattern of lying and manipulation that happened with many people before me and continues to happen repeatedly with me.I just want to live in peace knowing that I finally told everything I lived through, and it's up to each person to draw their own conclusions.
